Bards' Corner

Our Minister of Arts and Sciences, Lord Eoin an Eich Ghil mac Cionaodha (Jen Kennedy): The following poem is by Lady Eridani of Alrewas, Shire of the Ruins, past poet laureate of Trimaris. It describes events that happened during the most recent Gulf War.

The Death of the King of Calontir

Hoy! and hear the telling tale of the King of Calontir
 For many a man his art in arms could not prove his peer.

Prowess proved he to foes on the field
 His hero's heart he would not yield

Sing sad songs to the passing on of the King of Calontir.

From lands afar he sought the star of the Ansteorran Lands
 And led his dour and doughty lads in war to lend their hands
 All amethyst and gold they wore
 With warring falcon went to war
 To aid in arms the sable star of the Ansteorran Lands.

Encamped they were nose to nose with the army of Asgard
 Whose shields of silver and spears so tall heralded hearts so hard
 But in those hearts a love they bear
 For the warriors who war birds wear
 The singing swords admired are by the army of Asgard.

In battles bold they fought the foe, the fighters of Trimaris
 Turn them tail and make them quail and let them know what terror is.
 Before the fort Calontir arrayed
 Armed and armored and unafraid.
 To try to take the tall house of the fighters of Trimaris.

Beat upon the brassy door, assail the sally port!
 The armies fought but all for naught before that fast held fort.
 Then thick out through Calontir's tide
 Burst the brazen foe in pride.
 Death's dreadful ride flowed fast and wide out from that sally port.

TrimarisU pride pushed outside at the house of blue and white
 The Sea bound Kingdom not dismayed by her opponents' might.
 Ansteorra's blackened star,
 Her allies pulled from lands afar,
 All died a dreadful death that day at the house of blue and white.

Bards' Corner (continued)

Hoy! and hear of the lone attack of the King of Calontir
 Praise him high, he death defied, a man who showed no fear.
 The last man of the battle plain
 Of all the rest he sole remained.
 With valor allied, he slipped inside did the King of Calontir.

Inside he was surrounded by Trimaris' warriors grim
 There was now no escaping the fate in store for him.
 Admiration stayed their hands
 This noble King of distant lands
 Was asked to single combat by Trimaris' warriors grim.

Around the walls of Trimaris fort were the dead of Calontir
 Their ghostly souls stood singing sad a canticle quite clear
 Their sovereign stopped and hearkened him
 He was no more alone and grim
 His heart was high at the singing sighs of the dead of Calontir.

Baron Karl, of Wyvernwoode, was first into the fray.
 Wisdom and wariness were what he used to play.
 His knowledge of a knightly life
 Was shrouded by that same day's strife
 Baron Karl, of Wyvernwoode, was first to die that day

Count Yoan was next to clash in arms with Sheridan the King
 A master of the spear was Yoan and coiled with speed to sting
 His strikes like snakes with fury fast,
 Alas, his prowess is all past,
 Count Yoan was next to die at arms with Sheridan the King.

Then came forth Richard, called the wolf, to try to kill the foe

His manner bold, his heart was cold, he stood there toe to toe.
 They fought and Sheridan dispatched
 The wary wolf with whom he matched
 And dead was Richard, called the wolf, who failed to kill the foe.

Next came the Hound of Ulster, the knight whose name was Kurn
 They came to blows and Sheridan then lost a leg in turn.
 Kurn asked his King for leave to take
 A courtesy for his foe's sake
 Upon their knees did Sheridan kill the knight whose name was Kurn.

Then Mittion, three times a king, unmatched in skill and might
 To Calontir's brave king came forth to have the final fight
 Now King to King, they were matched well
 To Mittion's hand the great King fell
 King Sheridan bowed to no less than King in that, his final fight.

Then through the walls of Trimaris fort flowed the dead of Calontir
 Their ghostly souls still singing sad a solemn song so clear
 They came and claimed their sovereign dead
 Who joined their ghastly ranks of dread
 He was borne away on a shield that day by the dead of Calontir.

Hoy! and hear the telling tale of the King of Calontir
 And if you go again to war their singing you will hear.

The dead and living both will sing
 And Asgard and the fort will ring
 Sing glad songs to the glory of the King of Calontir!
